IF YOU EVER NEED
—and everybody does sometimes—a reliable medicine to correct and relieve liver and stomach ailments, you are strongly recommended to give Beecham's Pills a trial. This popular preparation is inexpensive—an important consideration in these days—safe and efficacious. It is always a wise policy to give earnest heed to any indications of dyspeptic trouble. Never neglect early symptoms. The easiest, safest, and most economical way is to deal with them immediately they appear. You never know what consequences might follow a badly neglected case of digestive derangement.

BEECHAM'S PILLS
are admirably suited to meet the needs of those who desire relief from such symptoms as:—biliousness, sick headaches, irritability, disinclination for all exertion, poor appetite, irregular action of the bowels, unsatisfactory and unrefreshing sleep, unpleasant taste in the mouth and other well-known signs of an unhealthy or disordered state of the digestive system. If you ever suffer from troubles of this description, buy a box of Beecham's Pills and TAKE THEM!
Prepared only by THOMAS BEECHAM, St. Helens, Lanc. Sold everywhere in boxes, Price 1/1½ (56 pills) and 2/9 (168 pills).

You Talk of the cost of living,
DO YOU DO THE RIGHT THING TO REDUCE THE COST?

In these very abnormal times (which are going to become more abnormal still) if you do not take full advantage of Nature's great Economical Gifts there is no use complaining of the cost of living. Is there?

Porridge made with White's Wafer Oatmeal is the most delicious porridge ever tasted. It is unquestionably the MOST nourishing breakfast and supper food, as it is beyond a doubt by far the MOST economical food in existence. Rich men breakfast on WHITE'S WAFER alone. And you?

Buy Polish—not tins.
Buying boot polish in Penny tins means that a good proportion of your money goes in tins—not polish. The most economical way to buy polish is in the size. There is as much polish in one 4½d. tin as in six penny tins. And Max keeps perfectly always ready to produce a brilliant lasting shine whenever it is applied.
BIG 4½d. MAX

OBITUARY.

MR. JOHN O'DUFFY, L.D.S.

The death of Mr. John O'Duffy, L.D.S., R.C.S.I., of 54 Rutland square, Dublin, has caused genuine regret amongst dental practitioners and hosts of other friends throughout Ireland. The rebellion has brought about the loss of two well-known Dublin dentists. Mr. O'Duffy worthily represented the older school of dentists, and Mr. Hyland, the younger, and both of them were justly regarded with esteem by the members of the profession and the public generally. Mr. O'Duffy, who was 81 years of age, was accidentally killed by a bullet last week. He was one of the founders of the Dental Hospital in Lincoln place, and in other ways he did much to advance the status of qualified dentists. His son, Mr. Kevin O'Duffy, is Dentist in Ordinary to the Lord Lieutenant, and one of his grandsons was amongst the gallant band of Irish soldiers who nobly laid down their lives in their country's cause at Suvla Bay.

General Compulsion.

While we have been cut off by the insurrection from communication with Great Britain the recruiting problem has been in rapid process of solution. Mr. Asquith introduced in the House of Commons yesterday a Bill proposing general and immediate compulsion. At the time of writing the terms of his speech have not reached us, but we printed in our later editions of yesterday a short report of his statement on Tuesday in which he announced the Government's intentions. The new Bill, like its predecessors, does not apply to Ireland. The bulk of our readers are probably unfamiliar with the agonised process by which the Government has at last reached the point of proposing general and immediate compulsion for Great Britain. The compromise by which the Cabinet crisis was settled was revealed last Thursday, when the Government introduced a Bill which was afterwards withdrawn. This Bill proposed at once to compel time-expired men to serve until the end of the war, to abolish the choice of service as between Territorial and other units, to make exempted men liable for military service on the lapse of their exemption certificates, and to apply the Military Service Act automatically to youths as they reach the age of eighteen. It further outlined certain conditions under which Ministers pledged themselves to a full measure of compulsion within a definite period. These proposals met with a remarkable reception from the House of Commons. A great volume of criticism, led by Sir Edward Carson, came from every quarter, including the Radicals and the Labour Party. The "sense of the House" was clearly expressed in the view that it was grossly unfair to extend compulsion to certain classes like time-expired soldiers, while men of military age who had done no service at all, though in every way eligible, were free to shirk. In deference to this almost unanimous opinion Mr. Asquith withdrew the Government's proposals, for which the measure of general compulsion is now substituted.

We have a shrewd suspicion that other events besides the humiliation of this contemptuous rejection of its proposals by the House of Commons forced the Government's hand. That humiliation occurred during a week in which its reputation suffered enormous damage in two other and widely different directions. The beginning of the week saw the outbreak of the rebellion in Ireland; the end of it saw General Townshend's surrender in Kut-el-Amara. The Irish rebellion alone, more than any other event in the war, shook the position of the Government to its foundations. It must produce at least one resignation from the Ministry. There is no question that Mr. Birrell must go; the only question is for how many days longer—it cannot be more than a matter of days—he will continue to outrage public decency by retaining a nominal authority over this country which he has treated as a subject of light comedy and made the scene of appalling tragedy. For the pitiable ending of the heroic siege of Kut-el-Amara the Government may not have been primarily responsible; but it was ultimately responsible through its connivance in, or its ignorance of, that criminal mismanagement of the whole Tigris campaign by the Government of India which culminated in General Townshend's misfortune. A Government with these two melancholy issues to the credit of its blunders could not come a second time with half-hearted compromises before a House of Commons which, rarely representative of the nation, demanded with one voice vigorous and decisive action in every department of the war's conduct. In the face of that demand the Government has coupled with the proposals of last week's abortive Bill a measure of general and immediate compulsion. It is doubtless true, as Mr. Asquith said on Tuesday, that the new method has little advantage over the old in the way of getting a larger number of men, or the right men, in an appreciably shorter time. But it has this overwhelming advantage—that it settles the whole matter once for all, and removes the conduct of the war from the complications of a series of Cabinet crises and hagglings over a little more or a little less compulsion. Everybody, again, agrees with Mr. Asquith that it is desirable to secure for necessary war measures "something in the nature of general consent." But it is surely remarkable that the Government hesitates to take such measures even when, as the House of Commons showed it unmistakably last week, that consent already exists and has long existed. Are not last week's events in Ireland sufficient to convince Mr. Asquith that the first business of a Government in time of war is to govern?

Telephones.

In the past week's street fighting in Dublin the local telephone service must have been invaluable to the military. By great good luck it was at their disposal from the first. In modern warfare everywhere the telephone plays an important part. Its special advantages to the superior force in the kind of fighting waged in Dublin last week are obvious, and we suppose that the military control of an extensive telephone system in full working order shortened by several days the operations for the clearing of the city of rebel bands. In these circumstances orderly citizens have not grudged a monopoly of the telephone service to the military authorities. The restriction of calls to those which can be defined as military or medical was generally recognised as a wise and necessary order. To many persons, no doubt, it came as a hardship. When, for example, personal penetration into particular areas to inquire as to the safety of relatives, friends, or perhaps property, was impossible, it was natural to think of the telephone as a means of communication that would be safe and easy. Often it was hard to find that way also closed. Many a man in the past week would have been glad to pay a large fee for one call, if only it could have been allowed. Except for such cases, we can, perhaps, acknowledge that it is no harm for us to have this experience. It has taught people that they have fallen into the way of abusing the luxury of the telephone. During the past few days they have found how many "calls" are not, after all, necessary. We get too quickly into the way of believing a thing to be a necessity, and the present experience should teach some of us a useful lesson. Now, however, business operations in Dublin are being pieced together again gradually, and, in the interests of the city, it is to be hoped that the telephone service will soon be available for general public use. No doubt, the authorities will bear in mind the large number of inconveniences of all kinds under which the citizens are labouring, and will, so far as it is in their power, reduce these inconveniences without needless delay. The removal of the telephone restriction will be widely appreciated.

THE FEIS CEOIL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES.

SIR,—Will you be so kind as to allow us to let the intending competitors and the public know that the Feis Ceoil cannot be held next week as arranged? When the postal arrangements are again in working order, and it is possible to arrange for a meeting of the Executive Committee, an official announcement of what is to be done will be made. Meantime, your favour will, no doubt, be much appreciated by the 690 competitors (with whom we have no means of direct communication) who had entered for what promised to be one of the most successful Festivals yet held under the auspices of the Feis Ceoil Association.—Yours, etc.,

DEATH PENALTY FOR REBEL LEADERS.

THREE SENTENCED AND SHOT.

ALL QUIET IN DUBLIN LAST NIGHT.

SOME DISTURBANCES IN SOUTH AND WEST.

Yesterday morning, following sentence of Field Courtmartial, three of the signatories to the notice proclaiming an Irish Republic were shot. These were P. H. Pearse, T. MacDonagh, and T. J. Clarke. This announcement was made in an official communiqué issued last evening. Other trials are proceeding.

The official report also states that small disturbances took place in parts of the South and West of Ireland on Tuesday. The rest of the country is reported quiet.

All was quiet in Dublin last night. There was a notable absence of sniping.

Important information dealing with the question of compensation for property injured or destroyed in the course of the revolution is published in another column. The points dealt with are—(a) Compensation from the Government; (b) the liability of rateable areas under the Malicious Injury Acts; and (c) the liability of insurance companies under insurance policies.

Arrangements are being made for the reopening of the Four Courts. The structure of the buildings is uninjured, but a considerable amount of damage has been done in other ways. The valuable historical documents stored in the Record Office have been tossed about, but not seriously injured. Workmen engaged yesterday in restoring the place to its normal condition found four bombs in the Law Library.

OFFICIAL STATEMENT.

THREE LEADERS SHOT.

The following was officially communicated from the Command Headquarters, Parkgate, Dublin, yesterday morning, Wednesday, 3rd May:—

Three signatories of the notice proclaiming the Irish Republic,

P. H. Pearse,
T. MacDonagh, and
T. J. Clarke,

have been tried by Field General Courts-martial and sentenced to death.

The sentence having been duly confirmed, the three above-mentioned men were shot this morning.

The trial of further prisoners is proceeding.

SMALL DISTURBANCES IN SOUTH AND WEST.

Yesterday there were still some small disturbances in the South and West of Ireland, in which some casualties have occurred. The rest of Ireland is reported quiet.

Larne has been added to the list of ports from which passengers may leave Ireland.

NO ALIENS TO LAND.

Until further notice, no aliens will be allowed to land in Ireland unless in possession of a permit which can be obtained from the Military Permit Offices, 19 Bedford square, London, or from the Military Control Offices, Room 547, Royal Liver Building, Liverpool.

NOTICE TO TRAVELLERS.

All persons who intend to travel between Great Britain and Ireland should be in possession of papers proving their identity.

Patrick H. Pearse, "Commandant-General of the Army of the Irish Republic" and "President of the Provisional Government," was 36 years old, a member of the Irish Bar, and the headmaster of St. Enda's school for boys at Rathfarnham, County Dublin. He was born in Dublin, but was of English descent. He had been a member of the Executive of the Gaelic League.

Thomas MacDonagh was an M.A. of the National University of Ireland, and a tutor in English literature of University College, Dublin. He was associated with Pearse in conducting St. Enda's School.

Thomas J. Clarke represented the old Fenian conspiracy on the "Provisional Government." He was convicted of association with the dynamite outrages in England in the 'eighties, and sentenced to penal servitude. On his release he returned to Dublin, opened a tobacco and newspaper shop in Great Britain street, and became prominent once more as a speaker at Fenian anniversaries.

ROLL OF HONOUR.

The following casualties among non-commissioned officers and men in Dublin are officially reported:—

KILLED.

Royal Irish Regt.—Flynn, 8786, Pte. W.; Waters, 8901, Pte. J.
Leinster Regt.—Masterson, 3704, Pte. T.

LIEUTENANT P. A. PURSER.

Lieutenant and Acting Adjutant Philip Adams Purser was trained in the O.T.C., Dublin University, and was attached to the Duke of Cambridge's Hussars on the outbreak of the war. In October, 1914, he obtained a commission in the Army Service Corps, and in February, 1915, was sent to Flanders. He was invalided home in the following May, but, on the expiration of six months, was able to return to duty. Early in April he was sent to the Curragh as Acting Adjutant, Army Service Corps, and on the outbreak of the Sinn Fein rebellion was the bearer of despatches from the Curragh to Dublin. He was "held up" by the Sinn Feiners before he reached Dublin, but managed to get through and delivered his despatches in safety. He was shot on the evening of the 29th April, while returning from Kingstown to Dublin. He was only 20 years of age.

LIEUTENANT G. MALONE.

Lieutenant G. Malone, Royal Irish Regiment, was one of the first officers seriously wounded on Monday, 24th ult. He progresses favourably in Dr. Steevens' Hospital.

GENERAL POST OFFICE.

EXPLOSIVE FOUND IN ITS RUINS.

On Sunday the military guarding Sackville street warned the few people who were let through the street, that they ought not to remain near the General Post Office, as there was danger of an explosion of dynamite, which the insurgents had brought into the building. The explosion did not occur; but [illegible] day a number of bombs were found in the ruins. They were made of salmon tins with fuses attached, and had they gone off would have done much damage. Since then the work of searching the ruins has gone on, and many strange things have been brought to light. Yesterday morning a box of gelignite was found. Handed over to Police Inspector Barrett, it was brought in order to a safe place until it could be examined by military officers.

LAST OF LIBERTY HALL

SETTING THE GAS RIGHT.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

For many years past Liberty Hall has been a thorn in the side of the Dublin Police and the Irish Government. It was the centre of social anarchy in Ireland, the brain of every riot and disturbance. When it was determined to use artillery to defeat the rebels Liberty Hall was singled out for the first target, both because of its great notoriety and because it and two neighbouring houses were strongly held by the insurgents.

On Tuesday night artillery arrived in Trinity College, and it was decided to start the shelling next morning. But the recoil of modern artillery is so violent that, in spite of the buffer, it is necessary to fix the trail of the gun in the ground. Under ordinary circumstances the recoil drives a spade-shaped plate of iron on the trail into the ground; but the streets of Dublin, being paved, prevented this arrangement from working. Accordingly it was necessary to dig up the cobble stones before the guns could come into action, and the closeness of the range from which it had been determined to fire (some 250 yards) made it fairly certain that any working party of soldiers would be shot down before their task was completed. However, it was thought possible to employ men in civilian clothes, and so in the early hours of Wednesday morning six volunteers from Trinity College—partly civilians and partly members of the O.T.C.—started out to dig holes for the trails near Butt Bridge, at the end of Tara street.

Armed with two picks, two crowbars, and two spades they began to work. But the task proved unexpectedly difficult. Dublin streets are paved with cobble stones some six inches long by four wide, and at least six or seven inches deep. These are set in a cement of tar, and are placed so close to each other that there is no room for a pick to enter between them. After half an hour only one stone had been removed in each position, and one crowbar had been broken. Accordingly a message was sent back for reinforcements and new tools.

THE INHABITANTS PERPLEXED.

Meanwhile the inhabitants of the neighbouring houses were much perplexed as to what was going on, and incredulous of the explanation that the gas supply of Trinity had failed and some attempt was being made to put it right. The arrival of soldiers, who formed up in the cover of the side streets and took possession of the corner house to cover the digging party caused them further alarm and curiosity.

Unfortunately, in Trinity College further tools were not procurable, and as delay seemed undesirable it was determined to attack at once, utilising what holes had been made. The guns cantered out by the Brunswick street gate, and came swiftly along Tara street. When they reached the two side streets which intersect it, about thirty yards from the quays, they turned off into these and unlimbered, the ammunition limbers being left there, while the guns were manhandled into the prepared positions. The volunteers from Trinity College left their work, and three of them formed a party to carry ammunition from the side streets to the guns.

THE GUNS IN ACTION.

The two 18-pounders opened fire almost simultaneously. At the first report every pane of glass in the street was shattered, and even in Trinity College the solid buildings seemed to quake under those who were lining the parapets. Machine guns placed on the tower of the Fire Station, the Custom House, and the Tivoli mixed their noise with that of the rifles, to form an indescribable and hideous medley of sound, almost deafening the gunners in the narrow Tara street. Liberty Hall and the adjacent houses were wreathed in dust and smoke, and appeared to be replying vigorously from machine guns and rifles. This was subsequently discovered not to be the case, as the rebels had got wind of the move, and partially evacuated their position on the previous night. Shell after shell was fired, throwing down the whole of one house and making the others mere empty shells. The crash of falling masonry was added to the din. Finally, after some forty shells had been fired, the work was completed, and Liberty Hall was no more. Of the house next to it only the partition wall remains. On it, by one of the freaks of shell fire, two pictures hung undisturbed, and on a mantelpiece which juts out from the bare wall a clock remained going.

When all was over a humorist from one of the neighbouring houses came down to inquire whether, after all the trouble, the gas supply of Trinity College had been put right.

THE SYNOD HALL.

The rebels took possession of the Hall in which the Church of Ireland General Synod is held annually, and occupied it during one day and a night. They discharged shots from it at any members of the military forces who were located in the district, and injured the building, but fortunately not very seriously.

RESUMING BUSINESS.

A number of business establishments were opened yesterday, and it is expected that in the course of a day or two—probably from Monday next—most of the firms whose premises have not been so damaged as to require extensive repairs will be able to open their doors and serve their customers as usual.

WORK IN PUBLIC OFFICES.

We understand that the principal public offices in Dublin have now resumed business, and that members of the staffs should report themselves to their various departments.

Irish Land Commission Offices, Upper Merrion street, will re-open to-day (Thursday).

An official connected with the Richmond Blind Institution, 41 Upper Sackville street, states that the reported firing of shots from the institution was entirely erroneous.

SKERRY'S COLLEGE, DUBLIN.
Classes will be resumed at 76 Stephen's Green and 10 Harcourt street to-day (Thursday) at usual hour.—(Advt.)

LOSS BY FIRE AND SHELL.

COMPENSATION CLAIMS.

IMPORTANT INFORMATION FOR OWNERS.

THE LEGAL POSITION.

One of the most important questions arising out of the Dublin insurrection is whether persons who have suffered loss of property by burning, shell and rifle fire, or looting, will be able to obtain compensation. With the view of being able to give some trustworthy information on this point, our Legal Correspondent yesterday obtained the views of several members of the Senior Bar as to the position of affairs. A carefully-considered opinion on the subject cannot, of course, be expected just at the moment, but the following information will go far to assist interested parties in taking necessary steps to preserve their claims to compensation.

In approaching the consideration of such a serious question, and stating the case in a manner that will commend itself to the lay mind, the position may most conveniently be looked at from three points of view—viz., (a) Compensation from the Government, (b) the liability of rateable areas under the Malicious Injury Acts, and (c) the liability of insurance companies under insurance policies. Under each of these heads it is important that claimants should be able to state with reasonable probability whether the damage was done by His Majesty's troops, by the rebels, or by looters.

DAMAGE BY TROOPS.

Where damage has been caused by the King's troops in the necessary suppression of insurrection, no claim can be recognised by the Government, save as a matter of grace, and it is quite possible in the case of Dublin that the Government may, as they did in reference to the air raids in England, appoint a Committee to investigate, and recommend a grant in aid to subjects whose property has been so damaged.

DAMAGE BY REBELS.

Where damage has been caused by rebels, or enemies of the Crown, it is open to the Government to take the same course.

MALICIOUS INJURY CLAIMS.

A remedy may also be open to claimants, under the Malicious Injury Acts, against the city and county. This, however, is a very difficult and novel proposition, as it may be contended that the Dublin rebels, though not recognised belligerents under international law, were acting in pursuance of an alliance with Germany, and, of course, damage done by the King's enemies would not fall under the Malicious Injury Acts. A further difficulty that must not be overlooked is that under the malicious injury procedure an information as to the damage must be sworn and lodged with the Clerk of the Petty Sessions district in which the damage was done within three days, "unless the claimant has been prevented by illness or other sufficient cause." It seems to be the general opinion of lawyers that, where it can be proved that injury to buildings and property was wantonly caused by looters, the malicious injury procedure would have full scope. On the other hand, it would appear to be an utterly unreasonable proposition that the very extensive damage that has been done in the City and County of Dublin during the rebellion should be thrown upon the ratepayers, which would be the necessary result of the application of a remedy under the Malicious Injury Acts.

INSURANCE POLICIES.

It is difficult to state a definite principle which would apply in general to claims under insurance policies, as their validity must, of course, largely depend upon the conditions of each policy. Some policies which have been issued recently protect insurers against bombardment and other war risks, and in such cases it is quite possible that the amount of damage may be recovered under the policies; but in the majority of fire policies there is a clause excepting loss or damage occasioned by invasion, hostilities, civil commotion, or foreign enemies. Any such clause would leave the sufferers during this rebellion with no redress against the insurance companies. It may, however, be pointed out that in the case of the San Francisco earthquake nearly all the British offices who had issued policies on property in that city, though not strictly liable, on the wording of their policies, for damage caused through earthquake; made an arrangement whereby they all bore a pro rata liability for loss suffered by their insured in that disaster.

On the whole, the advice may be tendered to every person who has suffered damage during the week that the wisest course would be to take steps to put in train every possible and legal remedy.

IMPRISONED IN RUINS.

SOLDIERS ALIVE IN DUBLIN THEATRE.

When the insurgents took possession of the General Post Office they captured a party of soldiers, composed of two officers and fifteen rank and file, as well as a constable of Metropolitan Police. They did not treat their prisoners badly. But on Friday night, while the Post Office was being bombarded, some of them decided to attempt to escape from the building. To do so they would have to expose themselves to the fire of soldiers behind a barricade at the end of Mary street. As a protection against such attack, they ordered their prisoners to go in front of them. The prisoners did so, owing to the danger of remaining in the Post Office, and most of them luckily got away unhurt. When the retreating insurgents followed, a number were hit by rifle fire.

Yesterday morning more was heard of the soldiers who had been hostages. Mr. F. R. Ridgeway, managing director of Bewley, Sons, and Co., Henry street, discovered that there were two soldiers alive in the ruins of the Coliseum Theatre. It was not long before they were released, when it was found that they were Sergeant Henry, of the School of Musketry, Dollymount Camp, and formerly of the Royal Irish Constabulary, and Private James Doyle, of the Royal Irish Regiment. Both were unwounded, but weak from want of food, having had nothing to eat since Friday. How did they come to be in the Coliseum? Being of the party imprisoned in the Post Office, when sent forth they had sought refuge in the theatre, and there they stayed unaware of the fact that the fighting about the place had ceased. It is reported that a member of the Metropolitan Police was in the ruins as well, but got back to the safety of his barracks.

FOOD FOR BRAY.

EXCELLENT WORK OF LOCAL COMMITTEE.

At the suggestion of Father Colahan, of Bray, Mr. Magee, Chairman of the Urban Council, called together the merchants of the township, who formed themselves into a committee, and sent to Liverpool a boat, which Mr. Collier had kindly placed at their disposal. On Tuesday night the vessel arrived at Bray with a consignment of provisions value for £3,000. The merchants of the township were indebted to Sir Stanley Cochrane, who very kindly guaranteed a large sum in order to enable the vessel to be sent to England. Yesterday the unloading of the boat began at one o'clock, and soon afterwards the provisions were on sale at normal prices.

SALE OF PEDIGREE STOCK.

Auction sales of pedigree stock, including premium bulls, will, subject to the approval of the military authorities, be held in the Showyard of the Royal Dublin Society, Ballsbridge, on Tuesday, 9th inst., commencing at 8 a.m. Messrs. Gavin Low, Ltd., will act as auctioneers for Aberdeen-Angus and Herefords, and Messrs. Thornton and Co. for shorthorns.

The Rev. Dr. Watters, who was wounded, has been successfully operated on, and up to the present he is doing well. There is now fairly good hope that his life will be saved.

PRISONERS IN THE GREEN.

DUBLIN CHEMIST'S ADVENTURE.

DUCKS AND MACHINE GUNS.

"Four Men in a Greenhouse." This might well be the title of a story concerning the rebel operations at St. Stephen's Green. From Easter Monday until the following Saturday four prisoners captured by the rebels had the trying experience of being forced to spend their days and nights amongst the flower pots. Their adventures were related yesterday by Mr. W. Hopkins Ashmore, M.P.S.I., one of the imprisoned quartet. Mr. Ashmore, who is a member of the Motor Cycle Volunteer Corps, was returning from a run in the country when he was ordered to stop by the rebels in Harcourt street. He was immediately blindfolded, handcuffed, and escorted to the rebel headquarters in St. Stephen's Green. The handkerchief was then removed from his eyes and the manacles from his hands. He was searched for arms, but had none. When his cycling tunic was removed, the button of the Red Cross Society was observed in his coat.

A VALUABLE PRISONER.

The rebel officers then realised that they had secured a valuable prisoner, and decided to detain him for the purpose of attending the wounded. He was taken to his quarters—a greenhouse nearly opposite the Royal College of Surgeons. Here he found another prisoner, Air Mechanic R. Pratt, of the Royal Flying Corps, who had come from the Curragh for the week-end, and was basking in the sunshine in the park when held up by the rebels. They prepared to make the best of things, and were about to settle down for the night when two other prisoners arrived. These were, Sergeant Hughes, of the Dublin Metropolitan Police, and a gentleman whose identity need not be revealed. A substantial supper was provided, and then motor car cushions and cocoa-nut matting were laid on the concrete floor to furnish them with a "shake-down." The situation of the greenhouse did not, however, conduce to sleep. About twenty yards away snipers, entrenched in a shrubbery, directed a frequent fire on the Shelbourne Hotel and other premises on the Green. The night, however, passed fairly peaceably, and nothing very serious occurred. On Tuesday Mr. Ashmore's services were frequently requisitioned, but there was, nevertheless, a good deal of leisure time, which was profitably utilised in caring the plants.

FEEDING THE DUCKS.

Mr. Kearney, the superintendent of the park, was very good to his visitors, and helped them with a regular supply of fresh milk and bread. The fact that his domain was frequently swept by bullets did not upset him, as he went about his duties as usual. At regular intervals, no matter how fierce the fusillade, he always fed the ducks in the pond, and they, too, seemed to be equally unconcerned with the strange and exciting tumult in the park. A robin throughout the fighting sat calmly in its nest near the greenhouse, and maintained an attitude of scornful indifference. Occasionally it would venture forth in quest of food. It had not much difficulty in securing it, as the lawns and pathways were strewn with the remnants of bread and biscuits. There was enough for all the birds in the park, and the joyous chattering of the sparrows and the happy piping of the thrushes and blackbirds showed that the rebellion brought joy at least to the feathered songsters.

On Tuesday night the quacking of the ducks showed that they did not relish the increased intensity of the firing. The birds, however, slept the sleep of the just, and when day dawned they sang as blithely as ever. The four men in the greenhouse had only snatches of sleep, but they were optimists, and did not complain. Wednesday was a busy day and there were many wounded. Mr. Ashmore, however, did everything required of him, and his companions continued to tend the plants. Their slumbers that night were disturbed by a bullet crashing through the glass and passing perilously near those within. The machine guns, which had been placed in position during the night, made things very unpleasant, and caused many casualties. Despite these exciting incidents, the quartet managed to carry on fairly comfortably. Food, liberally supplied to them by the rebels, was cooked by means of the furnace attached to the greenhouse, and Mr. Kearney never failed to augment the supply.

TOO GOOD TO LAST.

Matters, however, were going too smoothly to last. The fourth member of the company, whose name has not been disclosed, began to display signs of nervousness, and he became greatly excited when the machine guns were spitting volleys across the park. Sergeant Hughes was unfortunate in being struck by a bullet. It passed through his overcoat and entered his forearm, blood spurting freely from the wound and smearing the door of the greenhouse. Mr. Ashmore, however, was equal to the occasion. He was not equipped with bandages, but with the aid of a pocket scissors he cut a bandage from the sergeant's shirt and stopped the flow of blood. His prompt action saved the sergeant's life, as it enabled him to be taken to Mercer's Hospital, where he was skilfully treated, and is now recovering. The fourth prisoner continued to develop serious symptoms, and his condition became so grave that he had to be handcuffed and strapped. Eventually he was removed to hospital with the aid of resident students, who pluckily entered the zone of fire with a stretcher. The gentleman, unfortunately, died subsequently. The occupants of the greenhouse were then reduced in number to two.

AN IRISH REGULUS.

Mr. Ashmore was anxious to communicate with his relatives, who were naturally anxious about him. He was given permission on Friday to leave to see his sister in Rathgar, and, having assured her of his safety, he honourably returned to the Green and took up his old quarters with Mr. Pratt. Friday night was spent without incident. The rebels evacuated the park on Saturday, and the pair of prisoners found themselves free at last. They both stated that they were well treated by the rebels, but they were glad to celebrate their freedom by a good square meal. Countess Markievicz, who was attired in male uniform and armed with an automatic pistol, was profuse in her apologies to the prisoners. She explained that their detention had to be enforced for the cause of the Irish Republic.

RAILWAY TRAFFIC RESUMED.

The military yesterday permitted the running of two trains for the use of civilians on the Dublin and South-Eastern Railway Company's line from Westland row. These trains were run between Dublin and Wexford at the hours of 9 a.m. and 3 p.m. The service will gradually be improved. At present there is no service from Harcourt street, which, however, is expected to be opened shortly for traffic. A limited service is also being permitted on the other lines having their termini in Dublin.

The train leaving the Broadstone at 9.15 a.m. runs to Galway, serving all intermediate stations from Clonsilla, and the train leaving Galway for Dublin at 9.40 a.m. will serve all stations to the Broadstone. The Meath branch line is closed for the present. Passengers will be examined at the Broadstone before departure of the train for Galway, and on the arrival of the train from Galway.

THE TRAMWAY SERVICE.

Efforts are being steadily pushed forward to restore the tramway service. Already cars are running on the Dalkey line between Ballsbridge and Monkstown, and on the Rathmines line between Terenure and Portobello. The wires on some of the other lines have been broken at many points, and to restore them will involve labour and time, but the work is progressing as rapidly as existing circumstances will allow, and it is hoped that within a brief period a complete service will be established with the city. The service on the Inchicore line has also been partially restored, and the cars run now from Inchicore terminus to Lord Edward street. A number of the company's cars have been more or less damaged, and two have been completely destroyed by fire. They were held up opposite burning premises, from which they caught fire, and were reduced almost to ashes.

ASHBOURNE TRAGEDY.

DISTRICT INSPECTOR AND NINE POLICEMEN KILLED.

Further details of the fighting at Ashbourne, County Meath, have now come to hand. It appears that altogether ten policemen, including one officer, were killed.

On the Friday the police authorities received information that Ashbourne police station had been attacked. County Inspector Gray, District Inspector Harry Smyth, of Navan, and fifty Constabulary left in motor cars for the district, passing through Slane and Balrath towards Kilmoon, where there is another small barracks a short distance from Ashbourne.

The motor cars had proceeded a short distance from Kilmoon, which is on an eminence, and at the foot of which a small road branches off. The police did not know the rebels were at hand, the intention being to get out of the motor cars and march to Ashbourne. The Sinn Feiners had, however, secreted themselves in a small grove by the roadside at a place near Rathgate. They had entrenched themselves in the field, and at each end of the road they had taken up a position for attack.

Hardly had the police got out of the motor cars at the ascent of the hill than a fusillade of bullets was sent into their midst. Sergeant O'Shanagher, of Navan, was shot through the heart almost as he was leaving his car. The small police party at once took what cover they could obtain beside the motor cars and in the ditches. The rebels, however, closed in from all directions, and sent a messenger to the county inspector demanding the surrender of all his men.

County Inspector Gray declined, and gave directions to his men to return the fire. Handicapped by their cramped position, the police nevertheless held their ground, and the county inspector fell wounded, shot through both hands and part of the body. Several other casualties occurred among the police, and sniping proceeded for over four-and-a-half hours.

District Inspector Smyth, of Navan, was twice wounded, but, followed by a sergeant and some constables, he pluckily crept along the roadside ditch towards the rebels, who were gradually closing in.

Sergeant Young, of Kilmoon, was next shot dead. Other constables were being hit, but one wounded policeman from beneath a motor car continued to fire to the last. Suddenly the rebels appeared on the ridge overhead, and the district inspector fell dead with a bullet through his forehead.

An unarmed chauffeur named Kepp, in the employ of the Marquis Conyngham, of Slane Castle, was shot in the leg by an explosive bullet, and had to have his leg amputated, but he died.

The police fought until they had expended their last cartridge, and when they saw that further resistance was useless they surrendered.

The rebels took possession of the policemen's rifles and seized some of their equipment, but the men were afterwards released.

THE FOUR COURTS.

PROSPECTS OF AN EASTER SITTINGS.

It will be interesting to legal circles and others to learn that it is proposed to hold a meeting of the members of the Irish Judiciary and the Benchers to-morrow, to consider the position of affairs in regard to the reopening of the Four Courts. Easter Sittings should have commenced on Thursday of last week, but at the time when the Lord Chancellor would, under ordinary circumstances, have been standing in the Central Hall, wearing his State robes and receiving the judges, the building was in possession of the insurgents, and bloody war had usurped the place of law. It has been suggested that the judges at their meeting should adopt a course which would suit the convenience of the greater number of interested parties by deciding to hold a very short Easter Sittings, followed, after a brief interval, by an extended Whitsuntide Sittings.

STATE OF THE BUILDING.

It will be learned with pleasure that the building and the valuable records which it contains are nearly intact. A great deal of glass has, of course, been broken, and the furniture, books, and documents in many of the departments have been used to form barricades for the snipers. Attempts appear to have been made by the rebels to investigate the contents of the safes in the offices, but their efforts proved unsuccessful, except in the case of the safe in the Law Library. But it was like the case of Mother Hubbard and the bone, for they found that the "cupboard was bare."

HISTORICAL RECORDS.

Much anxiety was felt as to what was going on in the Record Office, where thousands of valuable historical documents, wills, deeds, etc., are stored, and great relief was experienced yesterday when it was found that the majority of these documents, though much tossed about, had not been seriously damaged. Some bundles containing wills had been thrown out on the adjoining streets, and had been taken away by residents in Church street, not so much, it is believed, as "loot," but rather as curious souvenirs of the rebellion. When these people learnt yesterday that the authorities were again in possession of the Record Office, it is to their credit that many of them brought these documents back to their custodian, and it is hoped that any other documents taken away will also be returned.

BOMBS FOUND IN THE LIBRARY.

A large number of workmen is engaged in restoring the place to its normal state, but this will necessarily occupy several days. In the course of this work yesterday four unexploded bombs were discovered in the Library. They were at once removed to a place of safety.

MILITARY PRISONERS IN THE G.P.O.

STORY OF THEIR ESCAPE.

Lieutenant S. L. King, 12th (Reserve) Battalion Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers, was a prisoner in the General Post Office from Tuesday morning last till Friday, having been captured by two of the rebels as he was on his way home through Sackville street. He had as fellow-prisoners Lieutenant Chalmers and another officer, who is in the Indian Army Medical Service; either ten or twelve privates of different regiments, and a sergeant of the Dublin Metropolitan Police. The men in charge of the Post Office seemed to have been well supplied with ammunition and with food. On Friday night some of the prisoners were taken down into one of the cellars, and confined there for some time, while the front of the building was on fire. They tried to extinguish the fire, but failed in that. The rebels left some bombs outside the windows of the cell in which the soldiers were confined. The Sinn Fein men were ordered upstairs in order to get away from the fire, when Lieutenant King made a noise to attract their attention. They came back in response to the noise, and asked who was there. Lieutenant King answered by asking: "Are you going to leave us here to be burned like rats in a trap?" The prisoners then were marched out of the cell in single file, and sent upstairs. They were then conducted out into Henry street, under an armed escort, and across to Moore lane, where they were "halted" in the lane. They were then warned that they would have to run for their lives into Moore street, and back again into Henry street. The rebels fired a volley after the prisoners, and wounded Lieutenant Chalmers and a private soldier. Two others of the ex-prisoners were shot dead near the top of Moore street. Lieutenant King jumped into McGivney's shop, and he lay there from seven o'clock on Friday evening till four next morning, when he found it necessary to make his escape from the fire which had seized that shop. As soon as he appeared in the street a fusillade was opened upon him from a barricade further down the street. He ran towards the Nelson Pillar, and across to Cathedral street, where, with some women who had come out of Hickey's warehouse, he took refuge in the Roman Catholic Pro-Cathedral.

REGIMENTAL PAY OFFICE.

This office will be re-opened at Beggar's Bush Barracks to-morrow (Friday).

We are asked to state that special arrangements are being made to deal with the inevitable dislocation of work caused by the burning of the Regimental Pay Office. New premises have been secured at Beggar's Bush Barracks. All persons who have written to the Regimental Paymaster during the last fortnight are asked to realise this, and, if necessary, to write again.

ENNISCORTHY RISING.

AN ARMOURED TRAIN AND A WAGGON.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

The newspapers say that the incipient rebellion has been completely crushed in Enniscorthy, but the loyal people of the town and district are not satisfied with the situation. I am informed that when the troops arrived most of the rebels at once made tracks for their homes and to the hills. This state of affairs naturally leaves a certain amount of anxiety among the business people and general public of Enniscorthy, which is a considerable industrial centre. During the time when the rebels held the railway station and the town many of the large traders were treated as prisoners by some of their own employés. They fear, naturally enough, that unless the rebels are properly rounded up, and unless an example is made of some of them, there may be a revival of trouble in a short time. The news of General Sir John Maxwell's Order for the disarmament of the Irish Volunteers has been received with satisfaction. It is earnestly hoped that the Order will be followed by a thorough and general disarmament of the Volunteers in this district. Those who are most familiar with the town and countryside believe that some such measure is essential to the public peace and safety.

Mr. Harold Ashton, writing in the Daily Mail, under Monday's date, declares that the first armoured train—a hastily-improvised one—used in Ireland was employed in connection with the Enniscorthy revolt. "It was a home-made fighting machine, slung together hurriedly, but very effectively, of materials to hand. It consisted of an ancient, but still serviceable engine, in the proud charge of a richly humorous Hibernian. There were two or three shell trucks shackled to the engine, armoured with hastily-pierced sheets of iron, and the whole amazing contraption was painted slate colour."

"An attempt to blow up the railway bridge was only partly successful, and only one area was also held up by the enemy outposts. These conditions prevailed up to the last few hours. The arrival of the armoured train and the sudden and most shocking appearance of 'Enniscorthy Emily' on the scene settled the hash of the enemy once for all. 'Enniscorthy Emily' is, by the way, the name given by her admiring and faithful crew to the deadly 15-pounder. 'Emily' and the armoured train, between them, were too much for the rebels, who surrendered unconditionally during the day, and gave up their arms. A consoling sequel to this is the official announcement: 'There were no casualties.'"

SPECIAL EXTRA EDITION.

RESIGNATION OF MR. BIRRELL.

STATEMENT IN THE COMMONS.

STRIKING ADMISSION.

UNDERESTIMATED THE SINN FEIN MOVEMENT.

Mr. Birrell, Chief Secretary for Ireland, has resigned.

An announcement to this effect was made in the House of Commons last evening.

The first intimation of this fact came to members when Mr. Birrell entered the House during question time, and instead of taking his seat as usual on the Treasury Bench, made his way to one of the seats behind, where he sat during the remainder of the questions.

Sir Henry Craik afterwards asked the Prime Minister whether he had any statement to make with regard to a change in the Government of Ireland.

Mr. Asquith at once rose and said—My right hon. friend (alluding to Mr. Birrell) will, I understand, make a statement.

Mr. Birrell afterwards rose, but before he could proceed to say anything Mr. Ginnell excitedly interrupted, and on a point of order objected to any statement being made. He refused to sit down although repeatedly called upon to do so by the Speaker. The House continued to roar "Order, order."

Mr. Ginnell a number of times began "I beg to give notice," but was unable to say anything more. Before he was finally crushed, however, he managed to get out that he would call attention on the adjournment to the "shooting of innocent men by the Hunnish Government."

He continued to shout after sitting down. Referring to Mr. Birrell, he said—"We have got rid of him at last."

The Speaker—I must ask the hon. member to control himself. If he cannot I will have to ask him to leave.

Mr. Birrell was then able to proceed. He said they had been promised a full, true, searching, and particular inquiry into the causes of the insurrection in Ireland, and as to the degrees of responsibility of the Irish Government for what had taken place. In that inquiry he would, as a private member, be able to take part.

When he was assured that the insurrection was quelled he placed his resignation in the hands of the Prime Minister, who had accepted it. There was no other course open.

Mr. Birrell admitted that he had made an under-estimate of the Sinn Fein movement. But if there was error on his part it had not proceeded from any lack of consideration or anxiety on his part. He could assure his critics they must change their tactics. He might have made errors, but he asked the House to consider what some of the consequences might have been had the mistake been made in suppressing the movement. Despite what had been done, the unity of Ireland had been preserved. T[illegible] an Irish rebellion. (Cheers.) VISCOUNT FRENCH'S REPORT.

The following report from Viscount French, Commander-in-Chief of the Home Forces, was issued last night:—

Dublin, Wednesday, 7.20 p.m.

The situation in Ireland is reported as quiet. The collection of arms and the arrests of fugitive rebels progresses satisfactorily. [illegible] strict cordon is still maintained.

Galway—The police barracks at Oranmore, about seven miles from Galway, were attacked by parties of rebels, but held out until relieved. In the West Riding of Galway the police report that the situation is well in hand, and that the rebels have been dispersed.

The South of Ireland is q[illegible]. Steady progress is being made towards [illegible] restoration of normal conditions.

The situation in Ulster is normal.

ZEPPELIN RAID.

NINE PERSONS KILLED.

Nine pers[illegible] were killed and 29 were injured in an air [illegible] on the English and Scottish coasts on [illegible]uesday night. MESSRS. BOLAND'S BREAD.

The Messrs. Boland, bread makers, of Capel street and Grand Canal quay, announce that from to-day they will be in a position to meet the usual demands of the public. Their principal bakery, at Grand Canal quay, and their flour mills have not suffered material damage at the hands of the insurgents. Large quantities of bread—15,000 to 20,000 loaves—baked on Easter Monday were given away to the poor of the district on Tuesday evening, 2nd inst., when the Messrs. Boland recovered possession of the bakery. The bread, although a week old, was fresh and sweet, and was greatly appreciated. The exceptionally heavy demands on Messrs. Boland's Model Bakery, Kingstown, since the beginning of the trouble have been successfully met.
